Board Certified Veterinarians receive advanced training specific to their specialty field for certification. In addition to becoming a DVM, they must:

- Complete four to five years of internship and residency programs under the supervision of multiple Board Certified Specialists ensuring consistency in training and adherence to high standards.
- Meet specific training and case load requirements.
- Perform research and have their research published.
- Upon completion of their residency, the resident must sit for and pass a rigorous board examination.

SURGERY

Scott Goett, DVM
